Community in America, Maine, and at Bowdoin

In this history “problems” course, we will explore the ideals and social, economic, political, and cultural realities of community in American history, and examine continuity, change, and socio-economic, racial, and ethnic diversity in community experience. We will begin by examining studies of communities in seventeenth-century Massachusetts and early national upstate New York. We will then sharpen our focus on Maine and on Bowdoin College and its midcoast neighborhood, working with readings in both the secondary literature and a wealth of primary sources.

Course expectations and requirements: The course will be held as a seminar, meeting once a week for three hours. For the first five weeks of the semester, our discussions will focus on community history. After fall break, we will turn for three weeks to the history of Bowdoin College. Students are encouraged to purchase the assigned books from the bookstore; a copy of each book is on reserve in the library. In addition, students are encouraged but not required to explore the further readings for each class meeting—primary sources (documents) and/or secondary sources (articles or chapters). Those reading assignments are available either on e-reserve through the Library Reserves link on Blackboard or by link to an online source or database from the History 332 Reading Guide on Blackboard. The Reading Guide also provides questions to help focus your reading. In preparation for each class meeting, students should read and begin to analyze the assigned texts; they should come to class with specific questions and some preliminary answers. By reading and participating in class discussions, students should develop an understanding of the research process and practice the analytical skills that they will use to pursue independent research in history. If a student misses a class meeting, the student is expected to write a 3-4 page analysis of the readings for that class. Class participation counts for 40% of the final grade.

Throughout the semester, students will engage in the process of designing and pursuing their own primary research projects. Early in the semester, each student will begin to formulate a thesis question and a preliminary hypothesis about some aspect of community history. In early November, students will submit a research paper prospectus which presents a preliminary thesis statement or hypothesis, a brief annotated bibliography of the primary and secondary sources that they will analyze, and a preliminary outline. For the last five weeks of the course, as students pursue their independent research projects, class meetings will rotate between small group discussions, individual conferences, and work-in-progress presentations. A draft of a section of the paper will be due in late November. The research paper (22-25 pages) will be due on the scheduled final-exam date for the course. Research methodology and process, including the prospectus, draft, and work-in-progress presentation, count for 30%, and the essay counts for 30% of the final grade.

All students are expected to read, understand, and abide by the Bowdoin College Academic Honor Code and by the rules of citation described on the Colby, Bates, and Bowdoin Academic Honesty Site at http://www.bowdoin.edu/studentaffairs/academic-honesty/index.shtml.
